NEXT week is as early as we can give the news from the democratic convention. But it is a foregone conclusion that President Wilson will head the ticket, and the people will elect him next November.

The republicans nominated Hughes and Fairbanks for president and vice-president, and the progressives nominated Roosevelt and Johnson, but it seems that Mr. Roosevelt cannot decide whether he wants to accept the honor or not. At least he is keeping it to himself. An account of the convention is given on an inside page.
